Hoosier Court Scene.

LOGANSPOUT, IND., Feb. 14.—This afternoon a most disgraceful and in every respect a regular street fight occurred in the Circuit Court. A minor criminal was on trial, and the accused was on the witness stand, and the prosecuting attorney was pinning the fellow down pretty close in his testimony, when a big lubberly fellow hallooed out from the rear of the court-room to the witness, "Get down and knock him down," (meaning the prosecutor) "d—n him."

At hearing this, the Court ordered the author arrested, but the fellow showed fight, and when several bailiffs gathered around him two of his friends came to his aid, and the three did battle so effectively against the court forces that the prosecuting attorney, county clerk and one or two attorneys were called to their aid, and here a rough and tumble fight occurred that baffles description.

During its progress one of the bailiffs was held down upon a railing that divides the room and was rendered powerless; another was struck a hard blow on the face, causing the blood to flow freely. The prosecuting attorney got into such close quarters that he had to use a heavy chair to defend himself, and with it he rained down blows on his opponent until the latter was badly cut about the head and rendered harmless.

As a final act in quelling the riot a bailiff excitedly threatened to shoot one of the rioters unless he subsided. When order was once more restored the disturbers of the court were placed under arrest and in default of $200 the two who took the most active part in the affair were sent to jail. Their names are Jacob and Isaac Harless respectively, and the first named is the author of the disgraceful scene enacted this afternoon. The other party to the racket is one John Studebaker, and the three are related to young Harless, who was being tried for a small theft.

Under a Twenty-Inch Log.

Troy Times.
During the recent cold snap Charles Doriarty, who was chopping wood alone in the forest near Lake George, was knocked down by a log twenty inches in thickness, and the log rolled upon one of his legs in such a way that it held him securely to the ground. He remained in that position thirty-six hours before he was found and released. His leg was badly frozen and will probably have to be amputated, but he kept himself alive by endeavoring to cut through the log with his jack-knife, which he had nearly accomplished when discovered. Doriarty says he suffered intensely when he found himself fastened, and during the later hours of his captivity it was only with the most strenuous exertions that he managed to keep at work with his knife. He worked during the darkness as well as in the daylight, and his hands were blistered from using the knife.

HETTY'S CHOICE.

(Abby C. M. Keever, in Indianapolis Herald.)

Hetty Harris was as winsome a lass as could be found in all Williams county. Pretty, bright, merry and a bit of a flirt; though how could she help being the latter with so many bewitching charms as Hetty possessed.

"You'll rue your careless ways, Hetty Harris, some day," croaked Hetty's aunt Mary, but the girl only laughed and gave the warning no heed, for she was young, and did not see the beautiful world through blue spectacles.

Hetty had admirers of a plenty—lovers, two at least, who might be so named truly; Frank Wiseman and John Ferris, but which of the two she preferred she could not decide. At one time she would think it was Frank, at another, John, and so matters continued until an event took place that opened her eyes to the state of her own feelings.

There was to be a party at a neighbor's and a great sleigh-load of merry young folks set out at twilight for the place of destination; Frank Wiseman and John Ferris among them, and Hetty, merry and sane, the life of the party.

They were going at a swinging trot around a hillside road, when to the surprise and consternation of everybody, the great clumsy sleigh rolled over, and tumbled them all down the hill.

Such a scene as ensued. Such screams from the girls, and I'm really afraid, a few naughty words from some of the boys, as scrambling, clinging, clambering, they picked themselves up; all but Frank Wiseman, who lay quite still, and made no answer to their questions.

"He is seriously hurt, I fear," said one of the boys. "Replace the sleigh-bed and let's take him to Dr. Swings' at once."

Hushed was the wild laughter, the sparkling jests, and in silence, broken now and then by low anxious whispers, they proceeded swiftly on their way.

But Hetty, who had been the merriest among them, sat still and motionless as a statue, her lips pale and drawn, her laughing eyes full of woe unspeakable. Hetty knew her heart at last.

They carried him gently into the doctor's house, and waited with beating hearts for his first words.

"An inward injury, caused by some heavy seat or board striking him. He may recover; we trust he will, we trust he will."

There was no merry dance that night, for none cared for that after the accident, and they were driven home instead.

Weeks later a pale, wan lover stood in Hetty's little parlor, pleading for an answer to the old question, always new, that he had begged for often before.

But this time he received no careless laugh or roguish smile, half doubtful, half hopeful. Instead, a loving little woman extended her hand, and with grateful tears in her eyes for his recovery, gave him the hoped-for answer.

And in spite of all aunt Mary's croakings, Hetty had chosen wisely.

Novel Use for Glycerine.

(Bradford Era.)

One of the strangest uses to which that dangerous compound nitro-glycerine has yet been applied, is to prevent body-snatching. It will tend to check the work of the human hyenas, if all else fails. The honor of the introduction of the article for that purpose is due some gentlemen in Michigan. At the burial of Mr. Clement W. Pearsall in the Troy cemetery, near Birmingham, Mich., a few days ago, after a brief service at the grave, the officiating minister said: "I am requested by three sons, who have brought their father's body to this sacred place, to say that an unusual rite will follow. Recent events compel us to believe that there are human beings fiendish enough to despoil the sacred resting place of our dead and to deserve the execration of all good people. These sons now propose to take such measures as, they hope, will secure the undisturbed repose of their father's remains and as will with absolute certainty insure the bodily annihilation of any who attempt to interfere. After the benediction they will remove the coffin-lid and place packages of nitro-glycerine about the body. The two persons who will do this are gentlemen whose business has accustomed them to the use of this dangerous explosive; they will therefore handle it with perfect safety. But should any desire to withdraw, they can do so without giving offence." The entire throng remained and witnessed the proceeding with many expressions of approval.

Adam never loafed about a hotel, kept a seat all to himself in a railroad car, wrote a postal card, listened in another man's telephone, told a fish story, berated the managers of the Young Men's Christian association, or drank schooners of beer. No; but he ate that apple, and was the first great cause of tailors' bills. We have tried to forgive Adam, but it comes hard in this weather.

A Brassy Suggestion.
A moderately thick plate of brass may be cut chemically by drawing a line or mark on its surface with a solution of mercury in nitric acid. The acid attacks the copper and the mercury amalgamates with the zinc, but as the "Iron" remarks, whether this is the explanation of what occurs or not, the brass becomes as brittle as glass at the place where the line was drawn and may be broken off.

Is This True?

In the youth of a State, arms flourish; in the middle age of a State learning flourishes; and then both of them together for a time; in the declining age of a State mechanical arts and merchandise flourish.

English Ill-Treatment of the Letter "H."

The ill-treatment which the letter h receives from a very large proportion of the English people is of course known to the most superficial observer of their speech. It is the substance and the point of a standing joke which never loses its zest. Mr. Punch's artists, when hard put to it for the subject of a social sketch, can always fall back upon the misfortunes of the aspirate.

H in speech is an unmistakable mark of class distinction in England, as every observant person soon discovers. I remarked upon this to an English gentleman, an officer, who replied, "It's the greatest blessing in the world: a sure protection against cads. You meet a fellow who is well dressed and behaves himself decently enough, and yet you don't know exactly what to make of him; but get him talking, and if he trips upon his h's that settles the question. He's a chap you'd better be shy of." Another friend said to me of a London man of wealth, and of such influence as come from wealth and good nature: "The governor has lots of sense, and is the best fellow in the world, but he hasn't an h to bless himself with." And there seems to be no help for the person who has once acquired this mode of pronunciation. Habits of speech, when formed in early life, are the most ineradicable of all habits; and this one, I believe, is absolutely beyond the reach of any discipline, and even of prolonged association with good speakers. In England I observed many people in a constant struggle with their h, overcoming and being overcome, and sometimes triumphing when victory was defeat.

The number of h's that come to an untimely end in England daily is quite calculable. Of the forty millions of people there can not be more than two millions who are capable of a healthy, well-breathed h. Think, then, of the numbers of this innocent letter that are sacrificed between sun and sun! If we could send them over a few millions of h's a week, they would supply almost as great a need as that which we supply by our corn and beef and cheese.

Precious Metal Mining in the United States.
(N. S. Shaler, in Atlantic.)

Whoever looks over the whole field of American precious-metal mining will be convinced that this industry is certain to make a very rapid growth in what is left of this century. He will also come to the conclusion that the production of silver is destined to increase very rapidly for a score or so of years to come, provided the demand for this much slandered metal does not fall too far short of the supply.

Beyond a brief term this yield of silver will surely diminish, especially if there is any considerable lowering in its price. The observant eye can also see that the production of gold is likely to be extended to many new fields, and that the yield of this metal in the future likely to be rather more steady than that of its bulkier sharer in the greed of men.

North America and the twin continent on the south are doubtless to be the great producers of precious metals in the future; their store of silver must be of greater value at the present price of this metal than their store of gold. If the country uses silver in the coming century as it has in the past thirty centuries their is a fair prospect that our continent will win some thousands of millions from its silver-bearing lodes. Even if we make what seems to me the mistake of using gold alone as a basis of exchange the production of this metal will no doubt give us a larger mining industry than any other country can expect to gain.

An Important Factor.

(Indianapolis News.)

In this country Bishop Asbury established the first school on the Raikes plan in 1786. Five years later the first Sunday school society was organized at Philadelphia. In 1793 Katy Ferguson a poor colored woman who had never heard of Raikes, established such a school for the benefit of the street children in the quarter where she lived, in Providence, Rhode Island. Sunday schools, it is said, were not connected with any church until 1809 at Pittsburgh. The schools founded by Raikes were very different from the modern Sunday school. The teachers were hired; most of the pupils were very ignorant, and often very vicious, belonging to the pauper classes. The spelling book and hymn books were almost the only text books required, as very few could read a line. Religious instruction, in the ordinary sense, was not given, because it could not be understood. The library, as an aid to education, was not introduced for some time. It is estimated now that there are 250,000 Sunday school teachers in the country and 3,000,000 pupils.

Another Way to Make a Living.

(Indianapolis Daily News.)

The number of defaced coins, silver half-dimes worn smooth and having holes bored in them which are in circulation in New Orleans, causes the Democrat of that city to make an investigation. It says that a person formerly residing in New Orleans, but who has left for Havana some time ago for good reasons, makes it his business to purchase in that city defaced coins, which, being uncirculated, are sold at about 40 per centum discount. These are then shipped to New Orleans to a correspondent; and by him put in circulation.

THE OLD ROAD.

In memory's picture-gallery.

There hangs upon the wall,
Not dimmed by Time's long marches,
Nor blurred by years at all,
The vision of a country road—
Deserted long ago—
Which winds down by the gray old mill,
Close by the river's flow.

Beside the road-edge stood a house,
Set in a garden bright,
With homely, rustic, flowers, indeed,
But still they served to light
The daily toil of those who dwelt
Within those humble walls,
For to the lowly often comes
Soft, dreamy spirit-calls.

Close by there stood a mossy well,
With cup of tin beside,
That thirsty travelers passing there
Might quaff the crystal tide.
The weary horses gladly thrust
Their panting nostrils deep
Into the stream which trickled down
The old oak trough so steep.

The road has long deserted been,
Its mill's loud whirr is still,
Its old gray wheel can still be seen
From the new road on the hill;
The grass grows long and rank and green,
All o'er the shady dell—
The cup has rusted long ago,
Which hung inside the well.

And where that humble cot
Stood sheltered from the blast,
A gate, with hinges broken, hangs,
Of relics this the last;
One bright-faced sunflower alone
Of the garden yet remains,
A heap of stones—'twas once a hearth—
And silence mournful reigns.

Causes that Lead to Loss of Appetite—

Remedies.

(Philadelphia Times.)

Loss of appetite is of common occurrence at the onset of many fevers, but usually it is a far more chronic complaint. Nothing is commoner than to hear people say that they "have no appetite," they "do not care for anything," or that they "hate the sight of food."

It is often enough associated with a condition of debility and general inaptitude for work. It is by no means uncommon in those who are worried and anxious and find it difficult to make both ends meet.

People who devote too much attention to the brandy bottle generally find meals rather a trouble than otherwise; breakfast, especially, is a difficulty. These individuals are generally very dainty and fanciful, and when at home grumble at everything that is set before them. They are very fond of abusing the cook for what is in reality the morbid condition of their own digestive organs.

Tobacco smokers, or, at all events, those who smoke in any quantity, are seldom great performers with the knife and fork. Tobacco and opium and alcohol seem all to have the power of deadening the appetite. People who take little or no outdoor exercise generally complain that they do not eat well, and no wonder. If a man wants a good appetite, he must earn it some how or other. Some one may give him his dinner, but if he is to enjoy it he will have to bring his own sauce in the shape of an appetite.

Irregularity of meals is another common cause of loss of appetite. The stomach appreciates regularity, and likes to have its wants attended to at the proper time. It is curious how in a well-regulated body the desire for food is experienced day by day at exactly the same hour. We all know how dreadfully bad-tempered many people get if their dinner is only five minutes late. It is all very well to say that they are stupid and should not be put out about trifles, but it must be remembered that it is no trifle to them, and that even a slight delay may give rise to a considerable amount of bodily discomfort. The stomach has been accustomed to receive supplies at certain regular intervals, and if it fails to receive them, it objects most emphatically. Nothing is more likely to spoil the appetite than eating or drinking between meals.

Dickens's Own Idea of His "Little Nell's Lying Dead."

Among the latest published letters of Dickens is the following early one, of forty years ago, to Mr. Cattermole, giving direction for an illustration in one of his stories—the scene of Little Nell Lying Dead:

"The child lying dead in the little sleeping-room, which is behind the open screen. It is winter time, so there are no flowers but upon her breast and pillow, and about her bed there may be strips of holly and berries and such free green things. Window overgrown with ivy. The little boy who had that talk with her about angels may be by the bedside, if you like it so; but I think it will be quieter and more peaceful if she is quite alone. I want to express the most beautiful repose and tranquility and to have something of a happy look, if death can. This for another picture!"

"The child has been buried inside the church, and the old man, who cannot be made to understand that she is dead, repairs to the grave and sits there all day long, waiting for her arrival, to begin another journey. His staff and knapsack, her little bonnet, and basket, etc., lie beside him. 'She'll come to-morrow,' he says, when it gets dark and he goes sorrowfully home. I think an hourglass running out would help the notion; perhaps her little things upon his knee or in his hand."

"I am breaking my heart over this story and cannot bear to finish it."

General McClelland.

The Concord, (N. H.) Monitor says of him: He has aged very much in the past few years, and is not impressive in personal appearance. Any one who knew him in the Army of the Potomac would hardly know him to-day.

Three hundred thousand habitual drunkards perpetrate the music of "We won't go home till morning" in the United States.—[Burlington Hawkeye.]

Sold Himself.

(Sioux City Journal.)

A Correctionville farmer sold a load of corn at that town the other day. When it was weighed, he slyly stepped off the scales, and then drove off to unload. When the wagon was weighed, he took good care not to be in it, and congratulated himself that he had cheated the buyer in good shape.

The grain-dealer called him in, and after figuring up the load, paid him in full.

As the farmer buttoned up his coat to go out, the buyer kindly asked him to smoke with him, and then talked over the crops and the price of hogs, and the likelihood of the Maple Valley Railroad building up that way, till the farmer fairly squirmed in his chair with uneasiness about his chores at home.

At last he could stand it no longer, and said he must go. The dealer quietly said that was not to be thought of; that he had bought the farmer at full weight, and paid him his own price, and that he would insist on doing as he pleased with his own property.

The raiser of corn saw that he had indeed sold himself, in one sense, at least. He acknowledged his cheat and compromised the affair. Now when he markets grain he don't stand on the scales.

Fun Ahead.

(New York Sun.)

An old and partially intoxicated sailor was brought up before Justice Wandell in the Yorkville Police Court yesterday. The Justice asked: "Thomas, why do you drink that nasty stuff?"

The old sailor respectfully saluted his Honor, and inquired of him if he meant liquor.

"That's just what I mean," replied the Court; "it is very nasty stuff."

"Your Honor is all wrong," pursued the old sailor, reflectively—"all wrong."

"Look at me," said the Justice; "I am over sixty years of age, and I have never tasted liquor."

"Was your Honor ever drunk?"

"Never in my life."

"May I be— Well, your Honor, you're not too old yet. There's fun ahead for you—heaps of fun ahead."

When the court-room became quiet in a measure the old sailor was discharged.

The Widow's Consolation.

(Milwaukee Sentinel.)

An old lady who does not live a great many miles from Milwaukee is fashioned after that rare type of people who are always finding virtues in her fellow-creatures when nobody else can.

The other day one died, hard, as the common report went, uncharitable, unkind to his family—but he was dead. Another positive and disagreeable quality which this man had was that he was forever prying into other people's business. The wife grieved, as a woman often does, when about to hide away what remains of bright, young bridal dreams. Her charitable companion grew nervous. Her kind spirit smote her for neglecting to pour the comforting oil upon the bruised feelings of the once happy wife. "There is this about it, my dear Mrs.—, Your husband was a very spry man!"

Oriental Extravagance.

Among the items which show the character of the brutal, drunken King of Burmah, is this:

The cradle which the King of Burmah has had manufactured for his child is so magnificent as to cost the state two lakhs rupees (about $50,000). It was first framed with mango wood and then inlaid with sheet gold inside and out. Over this is ornamental gold work, set with diamonds, rubies, sapphires, emeralds and other precious stones. The cradle is swung from a rod by cords made of gold wire; and the bed or cushion is of embroidered green velvet. The baby's wardrobe cost five thousand rupees.

Pin Making.

(Indianapolis News.)

Fifty years ago when a man could make but fourteen pins a minute, people used to take care of them, and when they got bent they straightened them out and made them serve again. Now 14,000 can be in a minute and people are perfectly reckless in their use. Europe makes 80,000,000 daily and the United States 51,000,000, so the daily loss may be figured at 131,000,000.

American Vineyards.

(Indianapolis News.)

It will be news to most people that Missouri has 1,500 acres of vineyards, producing last year 500,000 gallons of wine. Sandusky, Ohio, and vicinity, including the Lake Erie islands, 4,000 acres, producing 16,000,000 pounds of fruit; California 60,000 acres in grapes, representing in money, including land, $30,000,000.

His Ideas on Paragraphing.

(Norristown Herald.)

He was a stranger, but he entered with an air of confidence and handed us what he called a "joke." We examined it and told him that it contained neither sense nor point, and that it was a pure piece of idiocy. "Well," he replied reaching for his manuscript, "I have read your paragraphs for some time, and I thought you preferred them that way."

Why They Joined the Church.

A shrewd revivalist laboring in a Colorado mining camp, caused to be circulated the report that another revivalist at a rival camp had converted twice as many as he had, and in two hours every man in the camp came forward to join the church. They weren't going to let their preacher be beaten by those up-gulch fellows; not by a long chalk.

Healed by a Prayer.

Miss Jennie Smith, of Dayton, Ohio, related to the congregation of the First Methodist Church, New Haven, recently, how her faith had made her whole. She had been suffering for a long time from paralysis of one of her limbs, when in August, 1877, she was carried on a cot to Ocean Grove, N. J., where she remained until the end of October. She was accompanied by her sister who had never seen her walk. She entered the Homeopathic Hospital in Philadelphia. Her condition at that time she thus described:

"For twelve years a spasmodic twitching had been developed in my right limb taking at times several persons to hold it down. This increased in severity as time went on, until it was found necessary to strap a heavy weight upon it—for a large part of the time, a block of marble weighing fifty pounds. In the fall of 1871 it was found necessary to incase it in a box, the box being fastened to my cot by bolts and in December, 1877, I was relieved of this by a skillful surgical operation." Several consultations of physicians were held, but they decided that there was no help for her. Treatment was continued more in deference to her wishes than in any expectation of its effecting her recovery. On the evening of March 19th she was impelled to write to five friends asking their united prayer for that evening. She had already in answer to her prayer received a partial restoration, and she believed that God must be glorified in complete restoration but she found unusual strength and assurance. During the days that intervened between the calling of the meeting and its occurrence, she was in a waiting attitude, continually working deeper into the will of God. She suffered more and was weaker than usual all day, and lay in an extension chair. As the friends gathered she told them that the time had come when they should ask definitely for a knowledge of God's will toward her. After an hour or more some left the meeting, but others remained, among them being her physician, Dr. Morgan, who continued in prayer, occasionally varied with recitations of passages of Scripture and song. About eleven o'clock Miss Smith was led to offer herself anew to God. Up to this time there had been no increase of strength or cessation from pain; in fact, she was weaker than ever. After a brief silence there suddenly flashed upon her mind a most vivid view of the healing of the withered arm. At the same instant the Holy Spirit bestowed on her soul the faith to claim a similar blessing, and she was at once conscious of a baptism of strength as sensibly and positively as if an electric shock had passed through her system. Lying her hands upon the arms of the chair, she raised herself to a sitting posture, and then stood upon her feet. She knelt in a prayer of thanksgiving, and arose and walked across the room.

The next day she was upon her feet, and has since been able to travel about the country, and has never had any trouble with the lame limb, nor shown any symptoms of the attendant maladies.

They had just been married. He seized her hand and said in a low, tremulous voice:

"It was your innate modesty and apparent indifference, dearest Sallie, that made me register a vow to marry you at all hazards."

"Yes," she sighed, "but I slipped up on three or four of the most eligible young men in Galveston before I found that out."

Inherited Tendencies to Disease.

The present article is based on a valuable paper by Dr. J. B. Black, in the Popular Science Monthly.

Seventy thousand persons in America yearly die of consumption, most of whom have inherited the disease. Vast numbers inherit a tendency to rheumatism, epilepsy, insanity, cancer, indigestion, migraine, neuralgia, asthma, and to early loss of sight and hearing.

No other cause of grief and suffering compares with that due to organic defects handed down from parent to child. Of our forty millions of people probably twenty-six million inherit some constitutional defect.

But hitherto little has been done to arrest these tendencies. Physicians are called only to the sick. On the contrary, those who have inherited tendencies to disease are generally as careless of their health as others; while, in the case of those who already show the tendency, their friends are apt to pursue just the course most likely to strengthen it.

For instance, a consumptive is shut up from the out-door air and gentle exercise, though these are his only hope. Moreover, the whole influence of our social life and practices encourages the thoughtless squandering of vital reserve.

As a consequence, we are degenerating as a people. The death-rate and birth-rate are steadily approximating. The difference is already less in New England than in any country of Europe, France alone excepted.

Yet there is no inherent difficulty in the way of extirpating hereditary disease. Hygienic care would accomplish it—such care as can come only from a medical expert, and such as we are all ready to resort to in acute disease. Able physicians have thus been able to extirpate tubercular consumption from themselves, their families, and descendants.

What Eyes Are For.
[Philadelphia Ledger.]

The saying that the faculty of speech was given to men that they may conceal their thoughts is eclipsed by a reply attributed to the Chevalier Bunsen. He was present with Bishop Bloomfield and others at a "clairvoyant seance."

The bishop, amazed at the performance which, of course, he could not explain, exclaimed, "What then were our eyes given us for?" Bunsen immediately replied, "To limit our vision." This certainly is a clever paradox.

The significant truth it expresses is confirmed in every observing man's experience. The hopeful, sanguine and curious see wonders mentally and can give the exact dimensions, capacity and style of "castles in the air." But when actual sight and experience are appealed to the airy vision is limited and circumscribed by stubborn facts. Half our lives are spent in dreaming and the sight in dreams is far-reaching and magnifying. Bring the theories of philosophers and discoverers—the scope of their imagined vistas down to the test that seeing is believing—and then they frequently find the things they think they see are but dissolving views.

In the political field the "far-seeing" politicians are preparing themselves for an illustration of Bunsen's definition. All see; but since all do not see alike, there must be many cases of color blindness, and the roseate hue, in the actual light of events, will prove itself sombre to ninety and nine. If our eyes are given us to limit our vision, those are wise who make the limit include what they actually know, and never overlook the present and practical in trying to peer beyond.

Old Eph Makes His Will.
[Des Moines (Iowa) Register.]

Old Eph took a notion the other day that he must make his will, and called to consult a lawyer for that purpose. The attorney gathered a pencil and a piece of paper and prepared to make a schedule.

"Well, Eph, what property have you got?"

"Well, sah, dere dat onery hotted dawk dat nebber sarks, or ef he does he's allus talkin' in it. I lege him to dat nelly of mine. I nebber liked dat nig-gah."

"All right," said the attorney, "there goes the dog."

"Den dar's dat hazel splitter sow. Leab her to whoebber kin kotch her."

"The sow is disposed of," said the lawyer.

"De baccy box an' pipe kin go to the boy soon as he gets old enuf to spit froo his tee!"

"It's so recorded," answered the attorney.

"De house, and lot goes to de gal."

"But there's an incumbrance on the house, Eph."

"Whats dats you say?"

"There is an incumbrance on the house."

"Oh, dere am, am de! Den I is wuf more'n I thought I was. Leab de curm-brance to deole woman for to live on."

The Tramp.
[Atlantic Monthly.]

Should not the dictionaries revise their definitions of the word tramp, now that legislation in so many of our states has made the person a criminal? Massachusetts, following her New England sisters, offers the tramp the advantages of her state work-house and houses of correction, but in such a compulsory way as to deprive him of the boon of the attraction which it might otherwise have for him.

For the tramp is too sincere a lover of liberty to be grateful for any act which relieves him of it, even while insuring him those two prime necessities of his life, free board and lodging. The selection of a workhouse as his place of confinement is a peculiar indignity to the tramp, whose existence is based on the avoidance of work.

Whether his practice in this respect is the result of a thoughtful consideration of labor as the primal or consequential curse, or is based on an intuitive perception of the value of leisure, it is not now necessary to inquire. It is enough to emphasize the rigor of laws which not only assume the criminality of the tramp, but affix to it a punishment which is especially offensive to his sensibilities.

The Latest World's Wonder.

It is not uncommon for men and women who have been disappointed in love, or met with reverses in fortune, to take themselves out of the world by poisoning, shooting, hanging, drowning or stabbing themselves. Sometimes, in cases of emotional insanity, superinduced by morbid religious excitement or apprehension of calamity, they commit suicide. But Chicago can record the only instance of which we have any knowledge of a man killing himself because he was too prosperous.

This was the case of Louis Grumme, a German and a manufacturer of soap. He had conducted a very fair business for several years, and had accumulated a comfortable fortune; but a few weeks ago his business took a sudden start for ward. It increased so fast that he was unable to keep up with his orders. His book-keeper told him he would have to enlarge his factory and increase his facilities, but this he felt himself incompetent to do. He feared failure if he attempted it. But it worried him, and so preyed upon his mind that he became morose and melancholy, and finally, to escape the alternative of doing more business than he wanted to, he went to his factory when no one was in, and cutting the arteries in his left wrist with a pointed tin tag, allowed the blood to flow as freely as it would, but not ebbing fast enough, he entered a room where there was a cross-beam, procured a piece of rope and hung himself, throwing his whole weight on the rope, which did not fully suspend him from the floor, till he produced strangulation.

It was a most determined suicide, and is likely to remain unique in the history of suicides, as that of a man who killed himself because he was getting on too fast in the world.

Gen. J. R. Hawley is not the only member of the state Senate who entered the army as a private. That distinction is claimed also for Senator elect Harrison, of Indiana.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

He SUFFERED FOR 35 YEARS.
Gailford, Ct., May 15th, 1888.

For thirty-five years I have been the victim of that terrible disease, Dyspepsia; have consulted eminent physicians and tried almost every remedy. My family physician finally told me I could not be cured. The first dose of COE'S DYSPEPSIA CURE effected a cure, and in ten days I consider myself cured, and am ready to affirm that it is the most valuable medicine ever placed before the public. G. H. Richardson.

Padsuch, Ky., May 10th, 1887.
During a confinement of eleven months in Libby Prison, I was attacked with Dyspepsia in its worst form. For two years I have suffered with it. I tried all sorts of remedies, but without result. This spring I was debilitated as to be unable to walk one square. After taking two doses of COE'S Dyspepsia Cure I ate of everything on the table, felt no distress afterward, and have an excellent appetite.

F. T. GILLALAND, late Lieut. U. S. A., Detroit, Mich., June 3, 1887.
I would like to add one more testimonial to your Dyspepsia Cure. I have been a victim of dyspepsia for the past five years, have tried a great many medicines, and find relief only in COE'S DYSPEPSIA CURE.

Best Remedy for Chapped hands
Hegeman's Camphor Ice, it should be rubbed upon the part affected. The warmth of the skin will soften it sufficiently, under ordinary circumstances, but in extreme cold weather it may be necessary to warm it by the fire. If the hands are badly chapped, apply every night, and protect the hands by wearing an old pair of kid gloves. Hegeman's is the best and most popular of all Camphor Ice made. Hegeman's Camphor Ice is also a cure for sore lips, chapped face and sunburn. It is compounded with glycerine, which renders it more emollient than any other Camphor Ice, and it will be found a most soothing application to the face after shaving.

Be sure to ask for Hegeman's, (formerly made by J. Hegeman & Co., New York, and now made by the Metropolitan Med. Co., of New Haven, Conn.), and do not be put off with any other compound, which may become rancid, and do you more harm than good. HEGEMAN'S CAMPHOR ICE never fails.

Patterson Meant what he Said.
The following tribute to a well known and meritorious preparation will be read with pleasure by all who are suffering from pulmonary complaints themselves, or have friends so afflicted:

I hereby certify that my boy, ten years of age, was taken sick with typhoid fever, followed by congestion of the lungs. Dr. Byer, an eminent physician of this place, stated that he thought the boy would run down with Quick Consumption. Mr. Patterson told me that COE'S COUGH BALM was curing similar cases, and advised me to purchase it. When I carried it home my wife laughed at me; but I knew that Mr. PATTERSON MEANT JUST WHAT HE SAID. It has been sold in this city for two bottles, and it cured him; so that now he is as tough and healthy as anybody.

LYMAN DORMAN,
Huntington, Conn., Aug. 23, 1886.
New Haven, Conn., Nov. 18, 1889.

My children were all seriously troubled with Whooping Cough. We treated them with regularly prescribed medicines, with homeopathic specialties, etc., with but little or no relief until we got them COE'S Cough Balm, which immediately effected nature to restore them to good health. I truly believe it the best medicine in the world for whooping cough, and I will cheerfully back it. J. H. POST, Ag't Charter Oak Life Ins. Co.

Well Humbled Up.

A famous lawyer of Missouri, noted for his legal learning and classical scholarship, illustrated by his eccentric habits an old English song:

"The loss of wealth is the loss of dirt,
As ages in all times assert;
The happy man's without a shirt."

"Billy Campbell," as he was familiarly called, made much and saved little money, for he had no idea of its value. He indorsed for every body, and if he went out into the street with a pocketful of change he would return without a cent, having given something to every beggar he met.

One day, the sheriff, in reply to Mr. Campbell's question, "What's the news?" said, "Nothing new, sir, but this, I am sorry to say. I had to sell out your house and lot for the debt you owed as security for Mr. Hill."

"Oh, that's nothing," answered Campbell; the property is not lost; it has only changed hands."

Mr. Campbell was an easy-going bachelor, and had the reputation of being one of the most slovenly-dressed lawyers in the state. On one occasion, as he was about leaving home to attend the legislature, his sister informed him that she had packed a dozen new shirts in his trunk.

"Now, brother," said she, "do be more particular about your dress, and don't forget to put on a clean shirt at least twice a week. It's very mortifying to have you go about looking so dirty."

On his return home at the close of the session, she congratulated him on his hearty appearance.

"Why, you have grown as fast as a pig," she remarked; "they must have fed you well at the capital."

"Yes, they take good care of us," he replied, "for they are always in want of some appropriations."

Looking into her brother's trunk and finding but two shirts, she called out:

"Where, brother, are all those new shirts I gave you?"

"Don't you find them in the trunk?"

"No, I see but two."

"Possibly I may have some on me."

An examination disclosed that he was wearing six shirts—a fact which accounted for his apparent improvement in flesh.

Man and His Present Costume.
[Nineteenth Century.]

Sight and hearing are the two senses which the natural man, in common with the lower animals, possesses in great perfection, and it is evident that in addition to its usefulness to him as a mere animal, the eye affords him interest and delight long before his other senses become intellectually developed. In the very earliest stages of his existence we have proof in scratched outlines of animals that he observes with curiosity and pleasure the varieties of animal form which surround him.

In his progress toward modern civilization he rejoices in beautiful combinations of line and gorgeous arrangements of color. All through the long ages, till the seventeenth century this is distinctly visible, but growing fainter from the sixteenth, and it is when modern discoveries and appliances in the nineteenth have placed almost unlimited means in his power of gratifying this instinct that it disappears altogether.

Costume vanishes, utensils and weapons cease to be ornamented, or are ornamented with no conscious effort instead of natural impulse, beauty of form and color no longer has any charm, and the eye becomes indifferent.

The ugliness of most things connected with our ordinary habits is most remarkable. A well-dressed gentleman ready for dinner, or attired for any ceremony, is a pitiable example—his vesture nearly formless and quite useless if he can have his will. His legs, unshapen props—his shirt front, a void—his dress-coat, an unspeakable piece of ignominy. Put it into sculpture and see the result.

The genius of Pheidias might be defied to produce anything satisfactory. We see without disapproval ugly, shapeless, ignoble forms, and it must be remembered that these form the language in which the artist has to speak. The human form, the noblest and most interesting study for the artist, is distorted in the case of men's dress by such monstrous garments, and in the case of women's dress by extravagant arrangements which impede all simple nobility and refined grace of movement.

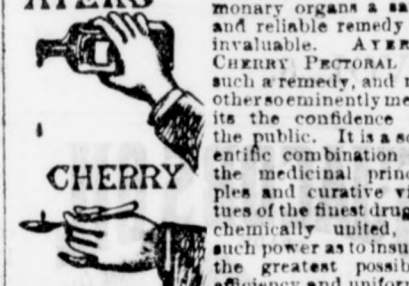

How a Ball can be Curved.
The question of curved pitching has attracted the attention of scientific and philosophical gentlemen for the past two years, and there have been those who stoutly affirmed that it was an utter impossibility for a pitcher to curve the sphere in the manner so often described in the reports of ball games. A special committee of the Providence Franklin society, appointed to investigate the question in relation to alleged curves in balls thrown by skillful hands, made a report to the society at a recent meeting to the effect "that after three stakes were placed in a direct line, at a distance of about thirty feet apart, the ball was thrown by a person standing behind the first stake in such manner that it passed to the right of the first, to the left of the second, and to the right of the third. The ball was then thrown that it passed to the left side of the first stake, the right of the second, and left of the third, thus demonstrating the fact that the pitcher has the power to cause the ball to curve to the right or left at pleasure."

It Depends on the Reporter, Too.
When you say to a Brooklyn man: "Your name is prominently mentioned in the paper this morning," a pained expression does not appear on his face. He looks anxious and exclaims: "Good Heavens, my wife mustn't see it! I wonder what scrape it is that the darned reporters have got hold of any way." Brooklyn differs from most cities.

A FABLE.
Scent and sunny was the way
When youth and I danced on together.
So winding and embowered a
We could not see one road before.
Nevertheless all merrily
We bounded onward, Youth and I,
Leashed closely in a silken tether:
Ah, Youth! ah, Youth! but I would fain
See thy sweet, foolish, face again!

THE BEST REMEDY

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

In diseases of the pulmonary organs a safe and reliable remedy is invaluable. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is such a remedy, and no other so eminently merited the confidence of the public. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, of such power as to insure the greatest possible efficiency and uniformity of results. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt relief and rapid cures, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest child takes it with pleasure. It is an ordinary Cough, Croup, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Croup, Croup, Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

Low prices are inducements to try some of the many mixtures, or syrups, made of cheap and ineffective ingredients, now offered, which, as they contain no curative qualities, can afford only temporary relief, and are sure to deceive and disappoint the patient. Diseases of the throat and lungs demand active and effective treatment; and it is dangerous experimenting with unknown and cheap medicines, from the great reality that these diseases may, while so trifled with, become deeply seated or incurable. Use AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and you may confidently expect the best results. It is a standard medical preparation, of known and acknowledged curative power, and is as cheap as its careful selection and fine ingredients will allow. Eminent physicians, knowing its composition, prescribe it in their practice. The test of half a century has proven its absolute certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

There seems to be considerable complaint against the gravel road company for not bridging Johnston's Branch and Owl Creek. The U. S. Organization of the Putnam County Horticultural Society.

A meeting was held at Moore Bro's law office, on the afternoon of Feb. 12, for the purpose of organizing a horticultural society. Owing to the prevalence of a snow storm the number present was small, but in enthusiasm and good feeling they equalled a host.

J. B. Johnson was called to the chair, and J. W. Ragan was chosen secretary. The committee chosen at a former meeting to prepare articles of association and by-laws, made its report and was discharged. Articles of association were then considered, somewhat amended and adopted.

After signing the constitution, the following officers were elected to serve until the regular annual election of officers, which occurs on the 3d Wednesday in October next: President, J. B. Johnson; Vice Pres. for 1st district, John W. Randolph; Vice Pres. for 2d district, W. A. Workman; there being no one present from the 3d district, the place was left vacant; J. W. Ragan, Secretary; Prof. J. B. DeMotte, Treasurer. By-laws were then adopted.

The next meeting of the society will be held at the old college building, on the 3d Wednesday in March, at 1 p. m. At that time W. S. Ragan will read an article on the early history of horticulture in Putnam County, and Mr. Pierson will read something on the value of fruits. A display of fruits and flowers will also be made.

On authority of the society, I extend a cordial invitation to all lovers of fruits and flowers to attend our next meeting.

W. A. WORKMAN.

Another Letter from J. D. C.

WINTERSSET, IOWA, Feb. 12, 1881.

THE STAR:—A mountain traveler often halts, in his weary journey, and looks back upon the valley below and the heights above. Finally, step by step, the towering peak is reached, and, turning, he stands amazed at the beautiful panorama that lies open before him in the valleys and slopes he has passed. Like that traveler, I to-day call a halt in life's wearisome journey, and, turning to the past, view again those soul-stirring events that are veiled in the mists and clouds of departed time.

Tender and tearful, my readers, were the leave takings with which we left our former homes. Though years have come and gone, the memory of the parting with relatives and friends who followed us to the turn in the lane is not forgotten. Brave, self-sacrificing men and women were they who left comfortable homes for the perils and privations of pioneer life in the wilderness.

I recall to-day the arrival of the emigrants in every conceivable shape and on foot. Oh, how dark and hopeless did the future of Putnam County look to me on that dreary morning in March. I started from Greencastle on foot and alone to go to Bainbridge. It had snowed all the night before. In the gray of the morning, just as the last notes of the night owl had faded away in the distance, I passed the Seybold place. The heavy snow having bent the boughs of the trees across the road, it had the appearance of a tunnel. I entered it almost in darkness, and walked on in silence until I got to Amos Robinson's, now the Crow farm. There I saw the smouldering fires of some log heaps being replenished with brush, and heard the musical click of the ax as it felled the timber, and I snuffed the savory bacon as it hissed and curled in the frying pan. Mrs. R. soon hashed up a toothsome breakfast from their scanty supply, spicing it with some costly morsel from the store. Coffee, bacon and slap-jacks were soon disposed of. No forbidding pile of dainty dishes to be paraded away—just a few tin cups, pewter plates and knives. A tap or two knocks the coffee grounds from the cups; a wipe cleans the cups and knives. Thus the morning dishes are cleaned.

Readers, our wives and mothers may wonder why, with such training, we so often turn up our noses at things at home. Ladies, it depends entirely upon who is cook. Breakfast over, I hear the billows of Walnut roaring. On arriving at it I find a large drift, on which I cross. Looking up and down the hillsides, I see the smoke ascending from the settlers' cabins. Just over the hill to the right I heard the sound of a cow bell, which I thought was the sweetest music I ever heard, for any signs of life were hailed with delight. I was so attracted that I followed the sound and came to a man cutting down elm and linn trees for his cattle to feed on the buds, so as to get them through that long winter. He informed me that the late arrivals in the fall, who had not been able to secure feed, had lost a great many cattle, and those who had raised a crop were short of feed, and had to resort to the browsing system. In this way many of the settlers who came in late succeeded in bringing the most of their stock through the hard winter. But they could not have endured the siege much longer, as they found in the spring that there was not much more vitality than was necessary on the part of the dumb brutes to enable them to get around and graze upon the new grass sufficiently to recruit their wasted bodies.

Many still relate with delight and with an air of triumph and astonishment the stories of how they endured such trials. I ascended the hill and passed through the unbroken forest until I came upon Abram Hillis. I wondered what he was doing with that cow by the big elm tree. "So, Bloss, so Bloss!"—what a persuasive way Abram had. After milking some time he exclaimed, "Blast the luck! there is a whole in the bottom of this cup, and it leaks faster than I can milk." He looked up and saw I was a stranger. I saw at once from the twinkle in his eye that he meant mischief. He invited me in, and after finding out where I wished to go, he informed me that I would have to pass through a place lately visited by a hurricane, and the fallen timber afforded convenient harboring places for all kinds of wild beasts of prey, and if I was not well armed I had not better try to go alone, as it would be about dark before I would get there. That was before there were such things as revolvers. I had a pistol, but the main spring was broken. Mr. Hillis advised me to go to John Marks, near by, and get one put in, which I did. Mr. Marks laughed heartily at my fears, and said it was one of Abe's jokes. I remained at Mr. Marks' all night.

In the morning, while traveling opposite the Dick's farm, I discovered a man lying in the middle of the road, who shall be nameless, and a horse near by. I soon discovered that his overcoat was frozen to the ground, having fallen off before it had commenced to freeze. He was imbedded so deep in the snow and mud that it was with great difficulty that I got him loose. When aroused from his stupor he took some whisky he had remaining, and I assisted him to get on his horse. Thus it appears that Abe's joke was the cause of saving a man's life. He certainly would have died without assistance. It has always been a mystery to me why that horse, hungry and cold, remained with his master during that night. There must be an over-ruling Providence that guides the destiny of man.

We traveled on together until we came to a large fallen tree, near where Stacy Reeves now lives, which he informed me had killed a son of Col. Piercy, while carrying the mail a short time before. Also that every man who rented or owned land that extended to that road, on either side, from Bainbridge to Greencastle, at that time, had passed away, except Wm. Randel. Which information afforded solemn and serious reflection. I finally arrived at the hurricane-visited spot, about one-half mile south of where Bainbridge now is. I ascended a fallen tree and "viewed the landscape o'er." I never saw such a distribution of timber. The track of the hurricane appeared to be about a quarter of a mile in width, and its course east and west. I could see scarcely a tree or stump standing in its course. It is said that it passed through several counties. Philip Ford informed the writer that there were but few settlers in the county at the time of its occurrence. He said the hardest work he ever did in his life was to hold his cabin door shut during the tornado, and he was a half mile from its main track. He further stated that there was an old settler at the time who was rather noted for his profanity, and it was the only thing that ever caused him to pray. It appears that he got things a little mixed while praying. He looked up, and seeing his wife taking it rather coolly, he exclaimed, "Old woman, why in the hell haint you praying?" and went on with his prayer in this wise: "O, Lord, God fer dam—I'm unprepared."

Bainbridge at that time contained four families, viz.: Wm. J. Darnall, J. H. Lucas, Adam Feather and Reuben George. Lucas at that time was a man of business—he was a landlord, Justice of the Peace, postmaster, merchant, and carried on a tannery. About that time a man came from Kentucky by the name of A. T. Paul, who contracted for the building of a carding factory and purchased largely of real estate on which he was going to build a fine residence, and his daughter was going to bring a piano. That piano was a great source of trouble to me. It was supposed that as I had latterly come into the county, I knew all about it, when, in point of fact, I had never seen one at that time. Paul proved a perfect failure, and the piano never came, and I was glad of it, for it wouldn't have looked like I had described it many times to the old settlers. The factory was built, which gave the first impetus to the improvement of the town. It caused many law suits and great loss to the contractors. It was finally taken charge of by D. C. Donohue, who ran it for many years with great success, and it was a great advantage to the community. J. D. C.

HAPPY FRIENDS.

(Jackson Daily Patriot.)
Rev. F. M. Winburne, Pastor M. E. Church, Mexico, Texas, writes as follows: Several months since I received a supply of St. Jacobs Oil. Retaining two bottles I distributed the rest among friends. It is a most excellent remedy for pains and aches of various kinds, especially neuralgia and rheumatic affections.

Antoine Gottlieb, of Dallas, Texas, went away from a revival meeting full of religious fervor and bad whisky, and sought his daughter at the house of August Knott, a neighbor, in order to "give her some sound religious advice. She refused to see him, and Knott told him not to enter. He went away, armed himself, returned for a fight, and got killed.

With perfect truth it has been remarked that the avenues leading to an early grave have often been opened by a cough or cold. All Throat and Lung Affections instantly cured by Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. Price 25 cents.

The color line is drawn sharply in the free schools of Fort Worth, Texas, and the question has arisen as to which side of it two children from Peru belong. They are of Indian parentage, and copper in color. They went to the white school and all the other pupils, acting under orders from their parents, packed up their books and retired. They refuse to go to the black school, as they are not negroes. The authorities are in a fix.

The A. S. T. Co.'s Black Tip, advertised in another column, is worn on fine and costly shoes, as well as on the coarser grades. Our readers in buying children's shoes should be sure that this tip is upon them.

Gregor Obershaw, a constable at Florissant, Mo., has not found his office profitable. Mistaking Frank Dimity for a thief for whom he was searching, he commanded him to halt and shot him for refusing. Dimity lost a leg through the blunder, and has been awarded $7,500 damages. Obershaw also goes to prison for a year.

FEES OF DOCTORS.

The fee of doctors is an item that very many persons are interested in just at present. We believe the schedule for visits is $3.00, which would tax a man confined to his bed for a year! and in need of a daily visit, over $1,000 a year for medical attendance alone! And one single bottle of Hop Bitters taken in time would save the $1,000 and all the year's sickness.—Post. 244.

Joseph A. Evans, at Clifton, N. B., thus write to Mr. Fellows:—"I believe, under kind Providence, that Mr. Fellows' Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites has been the means of restoring both my wife and daughter. The latter from Tubercular Consumption and I hope the afflicted will avail themselves of its use."

THE STAR.

FRANK A. ARNOLD, Editor and Proprietor

Saturday, Feb. 19, 1881

TERMS:.....$1.00 per year.

ENTERED at the Postoffice, Greencastle Ind., as second-class mail matter.

ON Monday last Hon. Fernando Wood, Congressman from New York and a Democratic leader, died at Hot Springs, Ark., whether he had gone for the benefit of his health.

THERE is no doubt that coal oil has medicinal qualities—it put a hired girl out of pain and tribulation at Cleveland a few days ago, but it also put the house out of the reach of the city assessor.

THE weather prophet predicts that the temperature will be mild during the remainder of the month. The snow and bluster that were to follow his thaw was fixed for the 12th, to continue to the 15th, and his prophecy has been so remarkably fulfilled that people hereafter will be inclined to put faith in him.

THE Legislature is having a heap of fun at public expense, but the public is not profited thereby. If the members would get down to work and pass the needed appropriation bills and a number of good wholesome laws that are sadly needed by the State, and then adjourn the people would rejoice, but there would be less $5-a-day time put in by the wise men of the State if this programme were carried out.

THE police of Washington City reported at headquarters, on Monday, that among fifteen players captured by them and released, during what is by courtesy termed a "raid" upon the gamblers' establishment the night before, there were two Senators and six members of the House. These, like the rest of the crowd who were known by the policemen, were allowed to give fictitious names, and under these false names they were served with subpoenas to appear as witnesses at the forthcoming trial of the keepers of one of the establishments.

An argument in favor of paper money is to be found in the following reported from Washington: Some months ago when Treasurer Gillfillan first suggested the feasibility of exchanging silver certificates for gold bullion and coin the idea was ridiculed as a good scheme for the Treasury, but it was predicted that holders of gold would never exchange it for paper good only for scant weight silver dollars. The fact is that owners of gold did accept silver certificates and the amount of this paper issued in this way at one time ran up to $30,000,000. It is considerably less now, but still applications for such exchange continue to come in. Treasurer Gillfillan received to-day an order for $50,000 worth of certificates in return for gold coin from an Indianapolis Bank.

THE Indianapolis Sentinel reports a touching incident as occurring near that city on Wednesday: The fear evinced by sheep for raising or running water is well-known. White River, black with liquid mud and covered with debris, was spreading everywhere over the bottoms and rolling rapidly. Something like a dyke or levee had given away, and a pasture containing a ewe and lamb was flooded, and not discovered until too late in the absence of anything in the shape of a boat or raft to rescue or save. The ewe and lamb sought the highest point and stood there. As the water continued to swell higher, the lambkin reared its fore feet to the neck of the dam, in which position it remained until both were swept away and lost.

THE rum the Legislature cannot do without is quo-rum.

THE remains of Dr. Homburg, of Indianapolis, who died a few days ago, are to be cremated in Le Moyne's furnace, at Washington, Pa.

THERE is a rumor that Vice-president-elect Arthur is a foreign born citizen, and therefore not eligible to the office. The matter is to be investigated.

THE dread scourge, small-pox, is prevailing to an alarming extent over the country. Vaccination is the preventive, and should be invariably adopted.

WELL, when is this foolishness going to cease. Mrs. Livermore now objects to women doing housework, because it dwarfs their intellects, as she claims. She does not say who should do the housework, but the inference is that the husband should gird his loins in a kitchen apron and take command of the dish pan.

AND now John W. Young, son of the late lamented Brigham, was arrested in Denver, Colorado, the other day, charged with bigamy. His Philadelphia wife is on the war-path. She has forgotten, in her anger, perhaps, that bigamy is not a crime when committed by any of the Young family or its followers. At least, if it is a crime in them, we fail to hear of the law being enforced to their discomfort.

WEDNESDAY's dispatches from Washington City make the following notice of a speech by Alex. Stephens: An unusual scene was presented in the house this afternoon. Alex. Stephens was rolling about in his wheeled chair, delivering a speech on the acceptance of the Collamer statue. The members all gathered around him with bended posture and solemn visage, as if the thought of death was on every mind. Entire silence prevailed, and now and then, when Mr. Stephens would endeavor to lift up his voice, it had a shrieking sound, as though of dying agony. The scene took on a remarkably solemn character.

Fatally Poisoned by a Potato-Bug.

RICHMOND, Feb.—Richard Jackson, secretary and treasurer of the Chase Piano Company, died at his home in Lincoln Hill early this morning. His death resulted from a curious case of blood poisoning which he believed was caused by accidentally mashing a potato-bug in his hand and touching the inside of one of his ears with it. His head gathered and he had it operated upon here, and afterward in Cincinnati and New York several times, without securing relief. The poison finally pervaded his whole system.

A Phenomenon.

VINCENNES, Ind., Feb. 11.—This city has a case on her hands that ought to attract considerable attention on account of the phenomenal circumstances surrounding it. In December, 1877, George Gardner, the twelve-year-old son of Dexter Gardner, an undertaker, was accidentally shot in the breast by a companion. The ball, a 22-caliber affair, entered the breast just above the left nipple. The doctors could not find it by probing, and as the boy felt no ill effects it was left alone, and the circumstance was forgotten till a few days ago, when the boy felt a hard substance working out into the lobe of his right ear. It has at last worked clear into that appendage, and can now be plainly felt nestling into the lower part of the lobe of the right ear. Just how this transition was accomplished by the ball is a question that now puzzles local philosophers.

Horribly Beaten Because She Forgot Her Prayers.

Living in some narrow apartments in a two-story frame tenement house in the city of Aurora, Indiana, is a carpenter, named John Saby, an employee of the Ohio & Mississippi railroad at their Cochran shops, located only a mile from Aurora. Saby came to Aurora only a short time since with his family, consisting of a wife and little girl of only three summers. Where he came from no one seems to know, and, judging by the sentiments expressed yesterday, nobody cares. Of his antecedents it is only known that his present wife is his second, and that the little girl was a child of the first Mrs. Saby. For several nights of late the neighbors who inhabit the building with Saby, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Suerman, proprietors of the tenement, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Broyles, and Mrs. Mattea and family, have been shocked at the exhibitions of cruelty which Saby has made upon his little motherless child, and two or three times they have protested. The little thing's step-mother is now in delicate health, and either unable or afraid to raise an objection to her husband's cruelty. The other night the unnatural father seized a part of a barrel stave, some eighteen inches long and an inch or an inch and a half thick, a formidable weapon, if used on a horse, and began beating his little child on her bare limbs, when Mr. Broyles entered and protested against such barbarity. As the neighbor entered, the unique spectacle was presented to him of a little child on her knees with her father standing over her with a club. Broyles commanded the cruel father to desist, when Saby said:

"Well, she won't say her prayers, and I'll make her do it if I beat her till morning."

Mr. Broyles suggested that possibly the little innocent had forgotten her prayers. "That's just it," said the brute; "and I'll make her remember them before I'm done with her." Finally the child was released from her father's clutches, and for a day or two the neighborhood had a rest from her screams. On Thursday night the father began his cruel work again. It was the child's bed time, and the supposition on the part of the neighbors was that he was again teaching the little girl religion (?) as cruel as that which influences the Hindoo mother to cast her baby to the crocodile. He was beating a prayer into his little child. The screams of the sufferer were heart-rending, and finally Broyles, whose right arm was crippled in the Aurora rolling mill some time since, and who now carries that member in a sling, told his wife he could stand the little child's appeal for help no longer. Seizing an ax in his left hand, therefore, he started toward the Saby apartments, saying that he'd either stop the father's cruelty or else do something that would entitle him (Broyles) to quarters in the county jail. Mrs. B., fearing her husband would carry out his threat, called to her aid one of the neighbors, and together they prevented what might have resulted in a tragedy. Again, however, at Saby's door they protested against the outrage, and for awhile all was quiet. About midnight, however, the sleepers on both sides of Saby's quarters were aroused by the child's screams, and by the sound of blows, which seemed to proceed from the barrel-stave weapon, but the screams lasted only a few minutes.

The little girl, the neighbors all agreed, is an unusually attractive child, intelligent beyond her years and very sweet. Everyone living on the street in which the tenement house was located, and have been more or less familiar with the father's inhumanity, were clamorous yesterday for something to be done. Broyles took the preliminaries toward having Saby arrested, swearing out a warrant against him, and he was free to assure the reporter unless the law protected the little child the neighbors of Saby would take the matter in hand and pay him a visit when it would be least expected.

An Indiana Paricide.

SHELBYVILLE, Ind., Feb. 11.—This evening a report reached here from Hanover township, eight miles north, of one of the most atrocious deeds ever committed in this county. A few miles east of Freeport lived Geo. Willard, a farmer of excellent reputation and some little wealth. His family was not a large one, his oldest child being a son near eighteen years of age, but who now bears on his young brow the awful mark of Cain.

On last Saturday morning Mr. Willard had some work to do on the road near his house, which he went out to do. After working two or three hours he started to return to the house to get warm. As he passed into the yard he met his son and told him to go and finish the work, to which command young Willard replied that he would not do it. Hot words followed, both men getting very angry.

Finally Mr. Willard told his son that unless he did the work he would shoot him, starting to go in the house. Young Willard at this picked up an ax and dealt his father a blow on the head, felling him to the ground, striking him twice in the side after he was down.

Mr. Willard was carried into the house, and medical assistance was summoned, but help was of little need, as this evening he was reported dying, his skull having been crushed and his ribs broken.

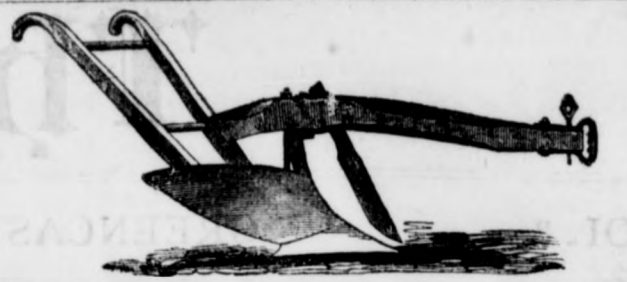

Since the commission of the crime young Willard has been showing a marked degree of repentance, and has never left his father's side since he struck the fatal blow. His grief seems to be so great that he is almost crazy, and constantly asserts that if his father dies he will too. His friends fear that he will commit suicide.

Mr. Willard was a man a little more than forty years of age; and has always borne a fine reputation. As the affair originated in the family, and is purely a family quarrel, there is very little probability that an arrest will be made, as none of his friends will appear against him.

Ed. Boyle's Nerve.

From the Reno Journal.

Superintendent Ed. Boyle of the Alta came in from Paradise Saturday evening and gives the following particulars of an accident which happened to him and his party on the way in: "As the stage was descending the steep hill the side of Paradise one of the wheels struck a rock and the driver and Col. Harding, an outside passenger, were thrown off. The lines became entangled with the horses' feet, and they started off on the dead run. Mr. Boyle and two other passengers on the inside found themselves in great danger. Mr. Singel jumped out, and for his daring was rewarded with a broken leg, a sprained ankle, and a bruised head. Mr. Boyle took in the situation and borrowing another passenger's six shooter leaned out and fired four shots at one of the horses, three of the shots taking effect, knocking the horse down under the pole and thereby throwing the other down, thus stopping the stage. This happened just in time, as only a few feet ahead there was a bend in the road, which, had they reached must have resulted in the upsetting of the stage, with great chances of himself and friend being seriously injured."

A public school and a parish school adjoin each other at Carondelet, Mo. The boys of the two institutions have fierce battles with snow balls. Principal Murphy, of the public school, was one day knocked down by one of these missiles, and on examining it he found it was made of iron slag, with only a coating of snow. He called Policeman Farley, who caught two of the parish pupils in the act of waylaying an enemy. The Rev. Father O'Reilly, who saw the arrest from a window, went out to rescue the prisoners. A fight ensued between the clergyman and officer, during which they damaged each other a great deal, and the boys escaped. All that night several policemen surrounded Father O'Reilly's house, trying to get in and arrest him, and he sat at an open window exasperating them with jeers and taunts.

A young Chicagoan gave an elaborate dinner to nine friends at Union Club in that city. The entertainment was well advanced when the steward entered the room, and whispered to the host that his mother was at the door demanding his retirement from the festivity. He went out to plead his cause, but she resolutely laid hold of him, led him to the family carriage and took him home. The guests finished the dinner with one vacant chair.

Mr. Lingo was so elevated over the building of a railroad to Lebanon, Ohio that he had a solid gold spike made, to be driven in a tie in front of his house. But the spike was stolen before the time came for the ceremony, and he offers $1000 reward for the capture of the thief.

Permits To Marry.

"Whoso findeth a wife, findeth a good thing."—Prov. xviii, 22.

Marriage licenses have been issued as follows: Thomas W. Bowen and Pattie A. Vaughan.

The Breach of Promise Suit.

Further in regard to the breach of promise suit of Haney vs. Stoops, mentioned by us last week, is as follows: "The lady sues for $5,000 as a balm for her damaged affections. She is a widow and has passed her sixty-second milestone, while the defendant has passed his sixty-sixth winter, and has recently taken another of Eve's fair daughters about the age of twenty. She will be content, however, with a judgment for $4,900, as the defendant has already paid her the sum of $100. The following is substantially his answer to the charge. James Stoops, the aged defendant, by James J. Smiley, his attorney, files his answer as follows: He says that he admits that he did promise the said Elizabeth that he would marry her if he did not change his mind, but that after he made such promise he did change his mind, and so informed her, and that they mutually agreed to abandon and withdraw all agreement to marry, and that he never afterward renewed said conditional agreement to marry her—that afterward, in the spring of 1880, she pretended he had promised to marry her and would call to him at times when he would be passing her house, and would send him notes, and in divers ways annoy him, and that while he was not under any moral or legal obligations to marry her whatever, and for the purpose of buying his peace and in the full satisfaction of all alleged right of action that she had against him by reason of him, defendant, having agreed to marry her, he agreed to pay her the sum of $100, which sum she agreed to accept in full payment, accord and satisfaction for all right of action she had against him, and which said sum of money he then and there paid her, plaintiff. The case bids fair to be one of much interest."

The Worst Case of Servant-Galism on Record.

New York, February 14.—Charles E. Crawford, a clerk, lives at 160 First street and Morris avenue. His family consists of a wife and daughter of 13. The 1st of September last, Mary Dooley, age 20, a quiet-looking girl was employed as a house-servant. She brought good references. A month or so after her arrival, various articles began to disappear. Inquiry threw no light on the matter. Jewelry and money next were missed. Search was made, and a pocket-book containing $150, stolen from the desk of Crawford, was found wrapped in some of the clothes of Annie Louisa, the daughter. She was accused, but denied the theft. Other stolen articles were discovered in a doll's trunk. The child was severely punished by her parents, who thought her denial added untruth to theft. They desired her to confess, and to this end severely chastised her. To avoid a further punishment the child acknowledged that she had stolen it. Property continued to disappear and the child was again accused. She denied, but, through fear of punishment, again confessed. In reply to a question what she had done with the things she had taken, she said she had destroyed them. Her parents began to think she was of unsound mind. The physicians put the matter down to insanity on the subject of stealing. The child was watched, but the property continued to disappear. Incendiarism was added to the robberies and the child, to avoid chastisement for telling an untruth, admitted her guilt. The hands of the little girl were now strapped to her side. Still the robberies did not cease, and another fire nearly destroyed the house. Crawford, to prevent his daughter from injuring herself had a belt made, and, procuring a chain, chained the child to the wall of the dining-room during the day, and at night to the post of the bed. Mary Dooley, the servant slept with the child to prevent her doing herself any injury. One day in the early part of the present month a lady called to see Mrs. Crawford. She placed aside her wraps, which consisted of a valuable fur-lined mantle and muff and bonnet. When she looked for them again they were gone. A detective found the articles in the garret that day. Annie Louisa was unchained, but went about the house with her arms bound to her side. Being threatened with punishment, she confessed to have placed the property where it was found. The father for some reason, now had reason to suspect his servant, and a neighbor informed Mrs. Crawford that Mary Dooley was dishonest. During her absence yesterday the place where she kept her clothes was searched, and there, carefully put away, was much of missing property. When Mary returned last night she was met by a detective and accused of thefts and of having set fire to the house on the two occasions. She confessed, and said the greater part of the jewelry and valuables she had stolen were at her home, and there they were found to-day. Mary was arraigned in the Police Court, where only a charge of incendiarism was preferred against her. She acknowledged the offense and was committed, in default of $3,000 bail, to await the action of the grand jury. "That woman," said the detective, referring to Dooley, "is the most wicked being I ever saw. It brought tears to my eyes when I saw that child chained to the wall like a dog. I don't see how she could have slept with the child and listened to the clank her chain knowing that she was the cause of it."

A Haunted School-house.

Says the Duquque (Iowa), Herald: "A weird and startling story comes from Sherrill's Mound, Dubuque county, to the effect that one of the schools in that well known vicinity has been dismissed on account of the building being haunted. It appears that one of the scholars, a girl about fourteen years old, is the especial 'butt' of the spirit that haunts the building. She frequently exclaims: 'There he is!' pointing to an invisible object in the room, which she says is a man, 'He has hit me again!' she cries out, 'right here on the elbow and on my ribs.' The teacher being thus constantly annoyed, sent for a pastor to unravel the mystery, if possible. When he arrived, the little girl, whose name is withheld, said she saw a man running about the school-house, jumping over desks, seats, and the heads of scholars, and cutting up all sorts of antics, even to pinching and striking her. The mystery was increased when the word 'Teufel' suddenly appeared on the black-board, apparently written by an invisible hand. This somewhat startled all present, and the school-teacher, it is said, exclaimed: 'That's too much; we must close the house.' It is stated that the spirit has followed the little girl to her home, and there annoys her and her people.

Annie Flagg declined James Druggs' offer of marriage, at Front Royal, Va., and when he pressed her for the reason she said that she was in love with Noah Benford. This was untrue, and regretted saying it, for Druggs vowed vengeance upon his supposed rival. She feared the threat would be executed, and sent a letter of caution to Benford; but it arrived too late, for he was found murdered, presumably by Druggs.

Latest Improved Telephone.

The present is an age of wonders; but inventive genius and mechanical skill have produced nothing in the present or past more wonderful and yet more simple than the telephone. It is a producer of the human voice to the fullest perfection; a volume of music full of compass, flexibility and distinctness of enunciation; it is a detective of the slightest departure of the human voice from harmony, and a vehicle full of concord of sweet sounds. It can chat merrily or solemnly, laugh or weep, whistle or sing, give forth the sound of a full brass band with all the force of Fourth of July enthusiasm, or transmit the softest, sweetest notes of the most delicate stringed instrument.—Ledger-Standard.

The difficulty of making audible the transmitted sounds has always stood in the way of complete success. This has been overcome by the Watts instrument, which, when properly adjusted, renders the sounds audible to a considerable distance from the instrument, so that telephonic concerts may now be made very enjoyable. This instrument will furnish a part of the entertainment to be given by the ladies of Locust Street M. E. Church next Wednesday evening, Feb. 23. The public are assured of an enjoyable affair.
